

Kevin Kaczynski

Kevin Kaczynski is a Berlin-based cinematographer who thrives on creating visuals that connect emotionally and resonate deeply. For Kevin, filmmaking is always a collaborative experience, where every frame is an opportunity to amplify the story and the emotions within it.

Kevin's passion for filmmaking began in his youth, capturing moments while skateboarding and immersing himself in music. These influences shaped his creative approach, blending dynamic movement with a strong sense of rhythm and storytelling. After completing his education in graphic design, he shifted his focus entirely to filmmaking. Starting in South Germany's small film community, he gained hands-on experience across multiple aspects of production, including camera work, directing, and sound design. Kevin has a deep passion for analog filmmaking, particularly 16mm, and values its texture and timeless quality, which he combines seamlessly with modern techniques to adapt to each project's needs.

Over the years, Kevin has worked with brands like Vogue, Lufthansa, and Tommy Hilfiger, as well as artists such as Boris Brejcha, Ben Böhmer, and many more. Kevin sees filmmaking as more than creating images—it's about collaboration, connection, and leaving a lasting impression.
